

bibliography . . .

of current magazines for personal growth and development

Subject-matter periodicals normally used by Extension people haven't been included in this list. Some of the selected periodicals you'll recognize, others are new. You may wish to subscribe to some of these in your office or get your local library to subscribe to them.

A good reference book you might use in checking out current periodicals is Magazines for Libraries by Bill Katz and Berry Gargal (New York: Bowker Company, 1974). It has been updated with a supplement. It includes the periodical publisher, how often it's published, audiences written for, current subscription price (subject to change), and a brief synopsis of the periodical. It also tells when a periodical ceased publication. It's indexed by subject areas for easy identification of a periodical or certain subject area of your interest.

- Journal of Individual Psychology Semi-annually Editor 1 yr. $7
Guy J. Manaster
Dept. of Educational Psychology
University of Texas at Austin
Austin, Texas 78712

Articles in this journal are based on the theories of Alfred Adler. It includes excellent book review and note sections of current books in psychology and human behavior. This is only one of a number of journals available now on Adlerian psychology. This one appears to be most useful in keeping current on new books and ideas in human development.

- Working Woman Monthly Subscription Department 1 yr. $10 Working Woman (or $1.25 on 600 Madison Avenue newstand)
New York, NY 10022

Practical articles for the working woman, whether married or single. New magazine that began November, 1976. Many articles on personal development would also be appropriate for working men.
